the pier. This arrangement, which is necessary only at low tide, causes no inconvenience to shippers and the work of the Port is proceeding in a normal manner. There are marked indications that the mud deposited at and near the pier will disappear in time when the littoral current becomes stronger at a later season in the year. It was also considered that artificial interference in the shape of dredging operations was not necessary or desirable at present. Quite recently the position has improved considerably. Remedial measures will be undertaken if and when nature has failed to establish the status quo ante.
